

On the drive for gardening as an essential dimension of the human being

Auteur

Hervé BRUNON

Directeur adjoint

Chercheur CNRS

Directeur de recherche

Communication dans un congrès

2024

Hervé Brunon. On the drive for gardening as an essential dimension of the human being. People and Disciplines in Function of Landscape, UNISCAPE; CICOP Foundation; CajaCanarias Foundation; University La Laguna; University Las Palmas de Gran Canaria, Jul 2024, Santa Cruz de Tenerife, Spain. (hal-04820009)

Humans have been gardening on Earth since the Neolithic period, in virtually all societies with agriculture. In fact, the most recent research suggests that the garden is even older than the field as a source of food. As Monique Mosser has pointed out, we can speak of a veritable 'drive for gardening' or 'gardening impulse', which refers to one of the deepest traits of the human condition, well highlighted by Robert Harrison: caring. This talk will attempt to lay down some philosophical and historical markers on this vast question.

Thème(s) de recherche

1. Décors, monuments, paysages : approches globales du patrimoine

Voir la notice complète sur HAL